The Boxer And The Goal

Andy Martin sees Sartre as the boxer and Camus the goal keeper. (Sartre practised boxing at a younger age; Camus, football. The boxer - a heavy hitter and the the form of all human struggle and the goalkeeper - The Outsider- not quite part of the team.) The book is easy to read, light-hearted, witty and humorous.

The Boxer and The Goal Keeper: Sartre Versus Camus by Andy ...

Boxer and the Goalkeeper describes the lives of Albert Camus and Jean-Paul Sartre, with a particular focus on their relationship and its ultimate collapse following publication of Camus' "L'Homme Revolte" (published in English as The Rebel). The book is absorbing, but Martin's interpretations of the two men's respective development and their ultimate conflict sometimes seem bizarre.

Sartre was a boxer and a drug-addict; Camus was a goalkeeper who subscribed to a degree-zero approach to style and ecstasy. Sartre, obsessed with his own ugliness, took up the challenge of accumulating women; Camus, part-Bogart, part-Samurai, was also a self-confessed Don Juan who aspired to chastity.

A boxer's goal is to knock his opponent down, stunning him so severely that he can not regain his feet before the referee counts to ten. This is called a knockout (KO), and results in a victory for the boxer still standing. When a boxer knocks his opponent down, he must retreat to a neutral corner, i.e., not one of the corners where the boxers' trainers wait to assist them between rounds.
